

PERFORMANCE ART STUDIES AT THE SFSH

The Performance Art Studies pilot project offers cross-genre, practice-based further education, focussing on the connection and linking of different arts and art forms, as well as the strengthening of one's own authorship and performative expression.

The programme is intended to encourage and empower participants to meet the growing demand for more fluid structures in the cultural sector and to formulate and implement their own artistic themes and fields in this sense.

With this programme, we want to challenge and strengthen participants to think and create freely and productively, to explore new forms of artistic practice and expression and to discover performance art for themselves as an immediate and open artistic process in which the body of the performer takes centre stage and is used to express or implement political, sociological, social and personal themes artistically.

The training is based on learning the methodological foundations of dance, acting, language/voice, performative practice, visual arts and immersive theatre.

Within the modules, in addition to the ongoing courses, inputs and workshops are offered by established guest artists from various fields, who provide insights into the complexity of the practice in a variety of ways and convey a repertoire of methods.

The training programme ends with a public, full-length final performance by all participants.
